Alex Shevchenko is a co-founder of Grammarly. As the Product Lead, Alex oversees product development, ensuring that every aspect of Grammarly's product gets the attention it deserves. He also serves on Grammarly's board and helps introduce the newest team members to Grammarly's history and product through Grammarly University's onboarding sessions.

Alex is inspired by watching Grammarly's team members grow, thrive, and become experts in their fields. Before co-founding Grammarly, Alex helped create MyDropBox, a plagiarism detection company, which scaled to serve more than 2 million students in two years and was later acquired by Blackboard Inc. Additionally, he's on the board of FarmTogether, a technology-enabled farmland investment platform where he's a seed investor.

Alex is a devoted meditator and is proud of his record of meditating every day for over two thousand days in a row.

He earned his BBA at International University in Vienna, Austria, and an MBA at the University of Toronto School of Management.
