

Heather Gille

Chief People Officer

LinkedIn →

Heather Gille is Grammarly's Chief People Officer. She's charged with ensuring the company attracts, retains, and develops the best talent in the industry. Her focus areas span the employee lifecycle and include everything from recruiting, workplace experiences, and learning and development to HR operations, IT, and real estate.

As an avid user of the Grammarly product, Heather understands firsthand the value of improving communications and connections across the workplace. Grammarly is committed to empowering everyone to do their very best work—especially Grammarly team members—and Heather brings her passion for talent to Grammarly's strong company culture.

Heather's career experience spans from startups to Fortune 500 companies, including Electronic Arts, McKesson, Gap Inc., and Hewlett Packard. With ten years of experience in finance, sales, and global operations and more than fifteen years of experience in human resources, she understands the value of driving strong business outcomes with goals that enable company strategy.

Heather holds a bachelor's degree in finance from Santa Clara University. She lives in Alameda, California, with her husband and three children.