

Robin Moore

Head of Legal

Robin Moore is Head of Legal at Grammarly, responsible for leading and scaling the Legal team. Robin enjoys the fast pace of a rapidly growing company and working on a product that helps people communicate with confidence.

Before joining Grammarly, Robin led the product and privacy legal functions at Dropbox, clerked on the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, and practiced in litigation at Williams & Connolly and technology transactions at Kirkland & Ellis. He earned a BS joint major in computing science and business administration, a post-baccalaureate diploma in economics from Simon Fraser University, and holds a JD from New York University School of Law.

Robin is a self-professed nerd: He loves anything related to economics or psychology, getting in the weeds on legal product and privacy issues, and reading Cormac McCarthy novels. He's also a big fan of the Golden State Warriors and returns to his hometown of Vancouver every summer to camp in British Columbia.