Stu West is Grammarly's Chief Financial Officer. As the company's head checkbook balancer, Stu focuses on everything from finance to metrics to strategy—identifying the big levers for building Grammarly's business and helping team members use them.

Stu's favorite parts of working for Grammarly are the team members, whose drive for excellence and commitment to the mission inspires him and the product—which he used to improve his writing long before he joined the company.

Stu's professional background ranges from working on Wall Street to diplomacy. He's most at home with technologists who feel driven to use computer science to create something meaningful. He previously spent several years on the board of Wikipedia and is still closely involved with that community. He won the Emerging CFO of the Year award from Bay Area CFO Awards for his work at Automattic, a parent company of WordPress.

Stu is also proud to share that his school-age kids think his work at Grammarly is cool. He's an enthusiastic traveler, videographer, and photographer.

He holds a BA in diplomatic history from Yale University.
