

Grammarly Nominated as "Best Bootstrapped Startup" in 8th Annual Crunchies Awards

San Francisco, Calif. -- -- February 6, 2015- -- - Grammarly, the world's leading automated proofreader, today announced it has been selected as a finalist in the "Best Bootstrapped Startup" category in the 8th Annual Crunchies Awards.

"Being selected as finalist in the Crunchies is a huge honor," said Brad Hoover, CEO, Grammarly. "While we don't have financial investors, many people have contributed to building Grammarly into an exceptional company and product helping English writers worldwide. We'd especially like to thank Grammarly's users and team members, whose input and hard work led to this recognition."

Co--hosted by TechCrunch and VentureBeat, this is the eighth annual competition and award ceremony to recognize and celebrate the most compelling startups, internet, and technology innovations of the year. Winners are chosen based on popular choice nominations and voting.

Grammarly was recognized at the 8th Annual Crunchies Awards on Thursday, February 5, 2015 at Davies Symphony Hall in San Francisco, Calif. T.J. Miller, better known as Silicon Valley's egotistical entrepreneur and tech guru, Erlich Bachman, hosted the event.
